

Environmental art needed

Not every element in the description needs to appear in the art. Use these descriptions as inspiration to help create a mental image of the space.

- Backgrounds will have character sprites displayed over them. They serve as a backdrop, and should focus the character displayed at the center.
- Landscapes will be displayed as full scenes with no character sprites, and should include a focal point.

Background: Keres Shipyard	A space station in orbit around Enceladus, an icy moon of Saturn. Being at the fringes of the explored solar system means it is rarely visited, except by passing ships in need of repairs. It is a highly industrial and practical structure made of platforms in open space, accessible to robot workers.
Background: Crew quarters	An interior storage room in Keres Shipyard that the robot workers use as a breakroom. Though not a space designed for comfort, the workers furnish the space with whatever junk is laying around. This is where 251 performs repairs on her coworkers using scrap parts she accumulated.
Background: Director's office	The office of the human director of Keres Shipyard. It's not very fancy, think like the office of a run down car wash. This is where Eris meets with 251 to discuss plans to take her to Saturn.
Background: Ship interior	The passenger chamber of a luxury ship that Eris uses to travel the solar system. Think like the back of a limousine, but more spacious. Eris and 251 get to know each other here on their way to Saturn.
Landscape: Elysium (outside)	A view from the skies of Saturn as Eris's ship approaches the city. It's made of golden-hued buildings built on a giant floating platform under a glass dome, like a giant snowglobe floating above the planet's turbulent clouds.
Landscape: Elysium (inside)	A view from inside the dome of Elysium, as Eris's ship passes over the buildings and streets. Daedalus HQ should be visible: a great palace-like structure that forms the city's center.
Background: Daedalus HQ Halls	The interior of Daedalus HQ. Exquisite halls with a blend of futuristic sheen and classical Roman aesthetics. High vaulted ceilings give it an airy feeling, and tall windows let the golden glow of the city shine through like morning light.

Background: Eris's Lab	A private lab inside Daedalus HQ where Eris spends most of her time. Unlike the rest of the building, it is messy and dimly lit. A practical lived-in space. Machine equipment and partially-constructed robots are scattered throughout. There is an adjustable workbench resembling an exam table where 251 will be placed for experiments.
Background: Eris's Bedroom	Another fancy room in the style of the rest of Daedalus HQ. It resembles a museum with display pieces of Eris's notable works over the decades. There is also a large king-sized bed, a large picture window overlooking the city, and a glass display case containing SYNC, the robot body that 251 will soon inhabit.
